Early detection key to breast cancer recovery

Almost 1.5 million people in the United States will be diagnosed with cancer in 2009. For American women, breast cancer is the second leading cause of cancer deaths.

The American Cancer Society recommends women in their 20s and 30s get a CBE as part of their regular physical exam at least once every three years and shortly before having a mammogram, but a mammogram can be completed without having had a CBE.

The National Cancer Institute urges women 40 and older to have a mammogram every one to two years. Women younger than 40, but with risk factors for breast cancer, should ask their health care provider when they should have a mammogram and how often.

A mammogram is an X-ray of the breast that can detect lumps up to two years before they can be felt. When breast cancer is caught early, before it can be felt or cause symptoms, it is also easier to treat. While mammograms can miss some cancers, they are still a very good way to find breast cancer.

A clinical breast exam (CBE) is an examination by a doctor or nurse using his or her hands to feel for lumps or other changes.
